Young Ladies are admitted to the privileges of the Institution, to pursue the studies specified in the preceding outline, so far as their time and circumstances will allow.

The course of instruction in the English Studies embraces three years; and it is believed that a thorough knowledge of these branches cannot ordinarily be acquired in a shorter period. The Academy is provided with apparatus sufficient for illustrating most of the important principles in the Natural Sciences. During the Spring Term the members of the school have the opportunity of attending the Lectures on Chemistry and Geology, delivered in the English Department of Phillips Academy.

The Study of the Languages holds a prominent place in the system. While this does not interfere with the course of those who wish to attend exclusively to the English branches, it is regarded the speediest as well as the surest method of attaining that discipline which is the main object of all study. Experience proves that, in ordinary cases, a daily recitation in one of the Languages, if pursued under proper instruction two or three terms, will fully compensate the scholar for the time and expense employed, by the habits of application which it forms, and the aid it affords in acquiring a knowledge of other branches. As this department is regarded highly important, and as many Young Ladies resort to the school for the purpose of enjoying these advantages, it is the design of the Trustees to secure, at all times, the best instruction both in the Modern Languages and in every branch of Classical study to which it is desirable for Ladies to attend.

During the whole course attention is given to instrumental and vocal Music, to Drawing and Painting so far as desired, and to Calisthenics. The latter taken in connection with walking in the open air and riding on horseback, is regarded as highly useful not only in affording a pleasing relaxation from severer employments, but in avoiding those diseases to which the studious are always exposed, and securing that tone of health which is requisite for happiness and success in any pursuit.

The principles of Reading in this Academy are illustrated and applied on Mr. Russell's system, well known in this vicinity, and accompanied by his personal instruction, for which there is no separate charge to the pupils. With these advantages, a connection with the school, to those who devote a small proportion of their time and attention to reading, is rendered highly profitable, as it respects this important art.

Frequent exercises in Composition are required ; and assistance is rendered to the members of the school by familiar criticism, and in directing them to a judicious selection of subjects suited to their advancement in this department. They also receive important aid in having access to valuable works in English Literature in the Library of the Academy, for the purpose of reading and forming a correct style. The analysis of English Poetry in connection with the study of Grammar is made a stated exercise for some of the higher classes.

It is made a prominent object in the system, to render special assistance to those Young Ladies who design to engage in teaching. During the Winter Term a course of familiar Lectures on topics connected with teaching will be given as a part of the regular course ; and, through the year, the arrangement of many of the studies will be made with reference to this object, affording, to such as desire it, the opportunity of attending to those branches in which they may be required soon to instruct. The habits formed in all the studies here pursued, are designed to render Young Ladies qualified to impart as well as to acquire knowledge ; and for those who wish to prepare themselves to instruct in Academies and Higher Schools, all the facilities are furnished to pursue a course as extensive as their circumstances may require.

The discipline of the school is designed, in all its parts, to secure self-government and a due self-reliance. No Young Lady is expected to join the Institution merely to be instructed and governed, but to learn to govern herself on the strictest principles of propriety.

The moral and religious welfare of the pupils will ever be an object of care and solicitude to the teachers and guardians of the school. All the members of the Institution from other towns are expected to attend public worship regularly on the sabbath with one of the several denominations worshipping in the vicinity of the Academy. The principles of the Bible, in which there is a stated lesson once a week, are illustrated and enforced, not only as affording rules for moral conduct, but as being an essential part of the system, and a source from which motives for well-doing should be constantly drawn.

No pupil is admitted to the privileges of the Academy for a less period than one Term except it be for special reasons. It is very desirable that all should be present at the commencement of the Term. Application for admission may be made to the Principal.

T E R M S .
